Apple Maps/Calendar Integration

When you put an event in Apple Calendar, if you add a location (address, landmark, or business name) to the event, a map and weather information are also added. If you now go to Apple Maps to look up the place you are going, you will find your event information shown on the map.

In the Calendar app on your Mac, double-click on a date to create an event. After you put the event title, then click in the location field below the event name and enter an address, a business name, or a type of business (such as "school" or "stadium"), then select a location from the list of locations that match what you want. If a list doesn't appear, or you don't want to select a location from the list, press "Return" to use the name you gave it.

If you select a location from the list, a map and weather info are added to the event. If you just use the location you entered, map and weather info might not appear.

Apple Maps/Calendar Integration

When you go to Apple Maps and pull up the destination of there you are going you will find that Maps tagged the location with your event.

The Power of the OPTION Key!

"Stuck between the Command and Control (ctrl, or ^) keys, the Option key, also called Alt key, because of the switch symbol \sphericalangle that adorns it, is... magical! It is (almost) never used alone, but in combination with other keys, to launch various actions." I've picked out some of the most useful ones from this list that I personally use. For a list of 80 uses, go to the article: Eighty Shades of Option Key by Gete.Net Consulting. You can download their list of 80 uses for the option key.

Apple history: Apple Co-Founder Quit And Cashed In His Stake for $800

Ron Wayne today and when he co-founded Apple in 1976.

April 12, 1976: Apple's third co-founder, a former Atari colleague of Steve Wozniak's named Ron Wayne, cashes in his Apple shares for just $800.

Wayne, who owns a 10% stake in the company, throws in the towel after worrying that he doesn't have the time or energy to properly invest in Apple. He later receives an extra $1,500 check to seal the deal. When he cashes it, he loses out on an investment that could have been worth billions.

"I was 40 and these kids were in their 20s," Wayne told Cult of Mac decades later, referring to Wozniak and Steve Jobs. "They were whirlwinds — it was like having a tiger by the tail. If I had stayed with Apple I probably would have wound up the richest man in the cemetery."

Ron Wayne: Apple's third co-founder

Wayne made several contributions to Apple. He drew the company's first logo, a woodcut-style depiction of Sir Isaac Newton sitting beneath a tree with a solitary apple dangling over his head.

Around the border, Wayne printed a quotation from William Wordsworth's The Prelude: "A mind forever wandering through strange seas of thought, alone." (The logo later was replaced by the iconic Apple emblem we see today, designed by Rob Janoff.)

Wayne also wrote up the first contract in Apple's history, codifying what all three co-founders would do. Wozniak would manage electrical engineering. Jobs tackled marketing, and Wayne would oversee mechanical engineering and documentation.

described Wozniak as "the most gracious man I've ever met in my life. His personality was contagious."

Wayne found Jobs tougher to deal with.

"He was a very focused fellow," Wayne told me. "You never wanted to be between him and where he wanted to go, or you'd find footprints on your forehead. To put it simply, if you had your choice between Steve Jobs and an ice cube, you'd nuzzle up to the ice cube for warmth. But that's what it took for him to turn Apple into what it became."

No regrets for Apple's third co-founder

To Wayne's absolute credit, he never showed any sign of regretting his decision. When Apple went public in December 1980, both Jobs and Woz became instant millionaires. Wayne fared less well financially, but got on with his life without complaining.

"The reason I didn't is very simple," Wayne said. "Should I make myself sick over the whole thing, in addition to everything else that's going on? It didn't make any sense. Just pick yourself up and move on. I didn't want to waste my tomorrows bemoaning my yesterdays. Does this mean I'm unemotional and don't feel the pain? Of course not. But I handle it by going on to the next thing. That's all any of us can do."

Years later, after Jobs returned to Apple and started to turn it around, he invited Wayne to attend a presentation in San Francisco showing off some new Macs. Wayne received first-class plane tickets, and Jobs' chauffeur met him at the airport. Apple put Wayne up in a luxury room at the Mark Hopkins Hotel.

After the conference, Jobs, Wozniak and Wayne ate a long lunch at Apple's cafeteria and reminisced about old times.

What happens when an iPhone falls 14,000 ft

Skydiver Hatton Smith, aka capt rum coffee, posted a video on TikTok with the title, "What happens when you leave your iPhone in your pocket when you go skydiving?" In the short video, you can see Smith and some friends jump out of an airplane. Right after Smith goes through the door, you can see his iPhone fly out of his jacket pocket and sail off behind him. Right away the video cuts to Smith and others on the ground, dislodging the iPhone from the earth and finding it amazingly undamaged and in working order.

Two factors seemed to contribute to that: One, the iPhone landed in a soft, grassy soil (and wedged itself an inch or two in). And two, as Smith points out repeatedly in his post's comments section, the handset had a protective, waterproof Catalyst case on it.

Smith appears to give the case most of the credit. He even said, "the phone case company won't email me back. Blow this up so we can make a commercial for them." Several commenters suggested the video is an ad.

And though iPhones are pretty tough on their own, another commenter joked thusly: "There is no in between with iPhone they're either indestructible or crack from a 1 foot drop on carpet."

But a 14,000-foot drop? No problem. Other commenters cited "terminal velocity," suggesting a thin, lightweight object like an iPhone won't see much difference between drops of 20 feet and thousands of feet.
